History

The True Blue Unit was created in 2002, in the aftermath of the September 11th attacks. The attacks exposed a number of weaknesses in the NYPD's counterterrorism capabilities, and the True Blue Unit was created to address these weaknesses. The unit is modeled after the FBI's Hostage Rescue Team, and it is one of the few NYPD units that is trained to conduct counterterrorism operations overseas.

The True Blue Unit has been involved in a number of high-profile cases, including the 2004 Times Square bombing, the 2009 Fort Hood shooting, and the 2013 Boston Marathon bombing. The unit has also been deployed to a number of other countries, including Afghanistan, Iraq, and Pakistan.

Training

The True Blue Unit is one of the most highly trained police units in the world. The unit's training program is rigorous and demanding, and it includes training in a variety of disciplines, including firearms, explosives, and hand-to-hand combat. The unit's training program also includes a significant amount of time spent on scenario-based training, which helps the unit to prepare for a variety of real-world situations.

Operations

The True Blue Unit is responsible for a variety of counterterrorism operations, including hostage rescue, critical incident response, and counter-terrorism investigations. The unit is also responsible for providing security for major events, such as the Super Bowl and the United Nations General Assembly.

The True Blue Unit is a highly skilled and experienced counterterrorism unit that has played a vital role in protecting the city of New York from terrorism. The unit is a valuable asset to the NYPD, and it is one of the most respected counterterrorism units in the world.
