Maria and her son, Juan, had been separated for over 10 years. Maria had come to the United States from Mexico to find work, and Juan had stayed behind with his grandmother. Over the years, they had lost touch, and Maria had no way of knowing if her son was alive or well.

Then, one day, Maria received a phone call from St. Barnabas Hospital. They told her that Juan had been admitted to the hospital after being injured in a car accident. Maria was overjoyed and immediately rushed to the hospital to be by her son's side.

When Maria arrived at the hospital, she was reunited with Juan for the first time in over 10 years. They hugged each other tightly and cried tears of joy. Maria was so grateful to St. Barnabas Hospital for helping her reunite with her son.

"I never thought I would see my son again," Maria said. "I am so thankful to St. Barnabas Hospital for bringing us back together."

Juan is now recovering from his injuries at St. Barnabas Hospital. He is grateful to be alive and to have his mother by his side.

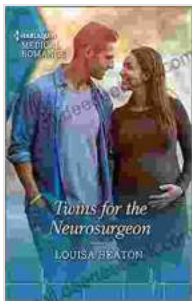

"I am so happy to be reunited with my mother," Juan said. "I thought I had lost her forever."

The Family Reunion Program at St. Barnabas Hospital is a free service that helps families reunite after being separated by war, disaster, or other circumstances. The program provides families with financial assistance, transportation, and emotional support.
